GOER Program Near Budget Crossroads

(What is GOER? See Page 27)

Ft. Knox, Ky.

THE Army soon will be confronted with a requirement to decide how vigorously it intends to press forward with a new concept of truck mobility, and how much money it can obtain for future procurement.

A demonstration staged at the Armor Center here on 17 September for top Service and Industry officials, led by Lt. Gen. Arthur G. Trudeau, Chief of Research and Development, showed that the GOER vehicles—one a 15-ton cargo truck and the other a 5000-gallon tank truck—have great potential in helping the Army to solve mobility problems.

General Trudeau described the GOER vehicles, with their large diameter, low pressure tires, positive powered wagon steer and exoskeletal construction, as "the first example of real off-road mobility that I have seen."

The Army's R&D Chief foresaw use of GOER trucks as missile carriers.

Between now and 1 February, the Continental Army Command's Armor Board will be conducting tests here, in Alaska, and at the Yuma, Arizona Test Station.

Early next year, the decision must be

AF Will Get Top Spot In Space

THE Air Force's claim to space has been boosted by the Defense Department at the expense of Army and Navy hopes.

The inescapable conclusion that the Air Force will hold the primary space roles and missions in the future comes from a 23 September announcement by the Advanced Research Projects Agency reporting a plan "for the progressive and orderly transfer of space projects from ARPA to the Military Departments."

The Department of Defense announced that the plan calls for the eventual assignment to the Air Force of responsibility for the development, production and launching of military space boosters.

Most notable project in this field is Saturn. This is being carried forward by the Army under a contract from ARPA at the Army's Ballistic Missile Agency, Redstone Arsenal, Ala., looking to a cluster of rocket engines with a thrust of 1,500,000 pounds.

The impact of the new Pentagon decision is that the Air Force eventually will hold responsibility for all boosters used in military space projects.

Dr. Herbert F. York, Defense Department Director of Research and Engineering told Pentagon newsmen that Saturn

There's No Rush For Inter-Service Transfers; AF Gets Most; Navy Least

INTER-SERVICE transfers, authorized in the Defense Reorganization of 1958, have gained little favor in the Armed Forces.

A JOURNAL survey shows that only a dozen officers have switched Services—seven of them from the Navy to the Air Force.

The Army gained two transfers, one from the Air Force, the other from the Marines. One Army officer went to the Air Force.

One Marine transferred to the Air Force, and another Marine chose to switch to the Navy.

DentiCare Hopes Rest Exclusively With Action Next Year On Capitol Hill

("Share Cost" Plan Advocated, P. 28)

It will be up to Congress to decide whether a DentiCare program for military families should be sought next year.

The Pentagon is not going to initiate action and neither will the American Dental Association.

The ADA, at its annual meeting in New York City, adopted a resolution stating that it would not sponsor any dental plan for Armed Services families.

The Association said, however, that it would support such a measure if proposed by the Defense Department or Congress and would insist on certain requirements to be incorporated in the plan.

The Defense Department will propose no dental care plan this year. It will likely oppose any dental care plan which may be advocated on Capitol Hill.

One dental care plan, introduced during the last session of Congress by Representative Melvin Price (D-Ill.), is making the rounds of the Defense Department.

This plan, similar to the Medicare program now in effect, has been approved by Dr. Frank B. Berry, Assistant Secretary of Defense for Health and Medical. It is opposed by Manpower, Personnel and Reserve officials and Defense Department budgeteers.

Defense Department feeling is that the tight military budget for Fiscal Year 1961 will prevent either the proposal of a DentiCare plan or the approval of any plan proposed by Congress.

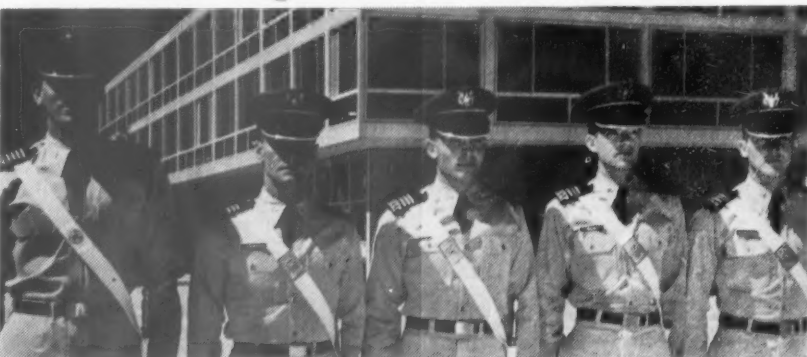

Service medical and dental officers see one hope for passage of a dental plan for military families during the next session of Congress.

This, they say, rests upon the initiative of Representative Price and Representative Paul Kilday (D-Tex.) in pushing the dental care proposal and holding full-scaled hearings on the subject.

At such hearings, they say, committee

Comptroller General Hits Pentagon Delay In Formulating Transportation Policy

Lack of a firm Defense Department air-sea transportation policy is hindering the economical operation of the Military Sea Transportation Service, according to Comptroller General Joseph Campbell.

A second major weakness in MSTC operations, Comptroller General Campbell has declared, is the failure of the military departments accurately to forecast their requirements and to cancel their reservations promptly when plans change.

A new formulation of transportation policy is being considered by the Defense Department in the form of proposals to

Garrison Norton Wins Public Service Award

Mr. Norton heads the Institute for Defense Analyses, a group of five universities performing research work for the Department of Defense.

PILOT PERFORMANCE A SPECIALTY AT VOUGHT

Ten miles high, at 1,000-plus mph pilots will fly "in their shirt sleeves."

A protective capsule will take over the job of providing environmental protection of the flier. No longer will he need to encumber himself with oxygen mask, pressure suit, personal parachute, bailout oxygen bottle, life jacket and raft and other survival gear. Sealed off in his protecting "thermos bottle," the pilot also is provided a highly advanced emergency escape method: the entire capsule can be detached from the airframe and gently parachuted to the ground.

Chance Vought conceived this system and now is developing it under contract. The advanced capsule is typical of the human factors progress Vought stands for.

This company has won its reputation largely through its own aircraft. As speeds vaulted above 1,500 mph, Vought learned to design cockpits of very high density. Meeting stringent carrier requirements in the design of Crusader series fighters, company engineers developed an exceptional feel for balancing high and low speeds in a single vehicle.

This experience is ideally suited for human factors work in spacecraft, as Vought has already proved in specific applications on projects under contract.

Today, in a space-oriented Cockpit Laboratory, Vought is working out the details of pilot seating, instrument displays and manual controls to make man not only a passenger, but an operator, of spacecraft.

Piloted aircraft, along with atmospheric missiles and antisubmarine warfare, are specialties in Chance Vought's Aeronautics Division. Other major interests are being aggressively advanced in the company's Astronautics, Electronics, Research, and Range Systems Divisions.

STILL A PILOT'S AIR FORCE

His plane looks like a missile. It carries missiles. It is an automatic machine itself—almost to the point of push-button control. But the Air Force pilot gives his aircraft discretionary guidance—a generalship that pilotless weapons can't match. Along sensitive borders today, we depend on pilot judgment and reason to keep our guard up without overstepping. The pilot's combat reliability is the foundation of our "mixed forces" concept of deterrent strength through missiles and manned weapons. And getting this keen observer out into space is the immediate goal of U. S. space-science efforts.

• AiResearch is now in quantity production of an extremely reliable engine bleed air fuel heater which prevents icing in the B-52 engine fuel system during flight. This unit utilizes a minimum of hot compressor bleed air automatically modulated to keep fuel temperature above 32°F. Heating the fuel in flight overcomes the icing problems resulting from the presence of a limited quantity of water in the airplane fuel system regardless of the source of such water contamination.

Efficient design and development capability made it possible for AiResearch to build an efficient lightweight bleed air fuel heater system on an expedited schedule of seven month's time from initial order to production delivery. ## Revised Housing Plan Starts At Lejeune

A new policy of assigning Marine Corps officers and men to base housing will be put into effect 1 October at Camp Lejeune, N. C.

Housing authorities will place all officers and men reporting to the base on waiting lists according to the date of detachment from their last permanent station.

Application for housing must be made within 15 days after reporting to Lejeune. A control date for quarters assignment then will be made coincident to the individual's detachment from his last duty station, regardless of whether he reports from a Stateside command or an overseas activity.

The new plan will allow the individual to take full advantage of authorized proceed, travel and delay time without an adverse effect on his chances of being assigned base housing. For example, a man departing Okinawa on 1 October and reporting to Lejeune 31 October, who applies for quarters by 15 November, will be placed on the waiting list of 1 October.

RCA Electronics creates the "501" to streamline the paper work of business—it reads, writes, figures and remembers on tape

Much of today's traffic jam in paper work is being eliminated by electronic data processing. But to build a system that would be practical and economical for even medium-sized organizations was a job for electronic specialists.

To solve the problem, RCA drew on its broad experience in building computers for military applications and combed its many laboratories for the latest electronic advances that could help. The result was the RCA "501" high-speed electronic data processing system—the most compact, flexible, and economical ever built. It is a pioneer system with all-transistor construction for business use.

The "501" cuts out paper work bottlenecks for many government agencies and businesses, from stock brokerage firms to public utilities, banks, insurance companies, and steel mills.

It "remembers" millions of letters, numbers, and symbols that are "read" onto its magnetic tapes by such things as punch cards and paper tapes. In a fraction of a second, it can do thousands of calculating, sorting, and comparing operations—and checks each step. Finally, it writes such things as bills, reports, payrolls in plain English at 72,000 characters per minute.

This economical and practical answer to an acute business problem is another way RCA Electronics is helping to simplify the growing complexity of business.

AF Ballistic Missile Program Moves Ahead

Air Force ballistic missile progress took two major steps forward this month with the first test firing of the Minuteman solid-fuel ICBM from its underground silo at Edwards AFB, Calif., and the announcement that construction will begin on Titan ICBM launching facilities at Ellsworth AFB, S. D.

One of five operational bases planned for the Titan, Ellsworth will begin its $47 million Titan construction program later this fall, with completion 20 to 24 months away. Total cost of the construction will be approximately $47 million.

Other Titan sites will be near Lowry AFB, Colo., Mountain Home AFB, Id.; Beale AFB, Calif.; and Larson AFB, Wash. Titan facilities are now being built at Vandenberg AFB, Calif., and are designed primarily for training and development.

In the Edwards test, only the first stage of the Minuteman fired in the launch was live. The second and third stages were dummies, approximating the actual stages in size, weight and configuration.

The entire Minuteman missile was tethered for the test. It was restrained from free flight by 2,000 feet of nylon cable in the shape of an inverted "Y" attached to the nose of the missile.

The tethered cable brought the missile back to earth after a flight of only a few hundred feet. The test was "successful."

Civilian-Military Uses Set For SAGE Centers

Joint military-civilian use of nine major SAGE combat centers has been agreed to by the Air Force and the Federal Aviation Agency.

The FAA will establish en route air traffic control centers at the nine SAGE (semi-automatic ground environment) installations throughout the country.

Lt. Gen. E. R. Quesada, USAF-Ret, FAA Administrator, said that use of the centers in en route air traffic control will result in increased safety for high altitude civil and military jets.

"Since identification and radar surveillance of air traffic are required in both operations, joint use of facilities will contribute to the identification capability of the air defense system and to centralized control of air traffic in event of an emergency," he stated.

After the combined centers are in operation, existing FAA Air Route Traffic Control Centers, now assigned the control of traffic at all altitudes, will become Terminal Transitional Centers for control of traffic below 24,000 feet in busy areas.

Cost of operating the joint centers will be borne jointly by the Air Force and FAA.

Radiation Inc. Will Conduct AF Missile Study

Radiation, Inc., has received an Air Force Air Research and Development Command contract for a tactical Air-to-Surface Missile study program to be performed by the Research Division in Orlando, Fla.

Although the details of this program are classified, the company said the "objective is to provide a sound basis for the determination of the technical and economic feasibility of the optimum advanced tactical Air-to-Surface Missile weapon system for a future time period."

The research activities of Radiation, Inc., were recently expanded by the addition of a second facility within Orlando and by establishment of a branch in the Washington, D. C., area, according to L. R. Everingham, Vice President for Research, Project Director for the tactical Air-to-Surface Missile study program is John Doolittle, Head of the Applied Research Department, Orlando.

step up the shipment of Army troops by air.

The proposals, originally made by the Army, were received with mixed feelings by the JCS. They could not reach unanimity on the subject.

The Navy has contended that any increased overseas airlift of troops would adversely affect the wartime capability of MSTs.

Mr. Campbell noted, however, that requests for an overall air-sea transportation policy have been before the Joint Chiefs and the Defense Department since March 1956.

"We have again been advised that the Department of Defense recognizes the need for the development of a specific air-sea transportation policy and that the

This is one of the most important telephones in the free world

A vital link in the nation's communications network, widely dispersed for safety

The phone is at Headquarters, Strategic Air Command. In the event of attack, orders would be given over it simultaneously to every SAC base, thus launching a massive retaliatory force against the enemy.

To a great extent, America's defense communications use the existing Bell Telephone network, which operates on land, through the air, and under the oceans. Today that network is so widespread and diversified that the resulting communications reliability is one of our important defense resources. Important telephone routes bypass major target areas. Many different means of communication back each other up, so that if one is lost another is available.

The Bell System has also helped create communications for such vital defense projects as our far-northern Distant Early Warning radar line for protection from aerial attack. And it is at work now on communications for BMEWS — the Ballistic Missile Early Warning System. These are just two of the many defense jobs that we have undertaken.

Swift, dependable communication is our business, whether to speed the cheerful voices of home and industry, or the sterner voices of defense.

Only Strength Can Lead To Arms Agreement

A distinct propaganda label was fixed on Premier Khrushchev's complete-disarmament-in-four-years proposal when, near the end of his address to the United Nations, he added that because the Soviet government wishes to approach the situation "realistically," the USSR is prepared to consider an agreement on "partial measures." He then repeated the worn proposals offered previously by the Soviets including the withdrawal of foreign troops from Europe and the liquidation of military bases abroad.

But Mr. Khrushchev's offer can not and will not be ignored. Most certainly, the Soviet Premier's proposals will be the subject of discussions when the 10-nation disarmament commission set up by recent agreement meets next year in Geneva. But the chances are that just as past disarmament talks have been stymied by Soviet insistence upon bringing in political considerations, so will the new ones.

Despite the Premier's repeated insistence of Russia's supremacy, for example his statement that they have ICBM's on the assembly line and we do not, and his deliberate ignoring our military strength by declining offers to visit our bases, one cannot escape the conclusion that he would, indeed, be willing to reduce our power by disarmament—that our world wide base structure and our missile potential are serving as genuine deterrents to aggression by force.

Unfortunately, there is danger that the propaganda effect of Mr. Khrushchev's UN speech could be felt at home as well as abroad; that it may lessen the Nation's awareness of the Communist threat to such an extent that it could be reflected in further reductions in our military budget. If so, Russia could achieve its objective without disarmament.

We hope there will be a realization that it is the strength of our Armed Forces that has prevented World War III and that a genuine, binding agreement on arms limitation can best be encouraged by maintaining and building our military strength. If we have strength-in-being Russia eventually may accept a real agreement; if we let our strength lag it is certain that she will continue to haggle and block effective arms reduction.

Mr. McNeil Ends 18 Years In Defense

The Nation and the Armed Services lose a skilled and dedicated public servant in the resignation of Wilfred J. McNeil as Assistant Secretary of Defense (Comptroller).

Since he began his government career in 1941 as a civilian employee of the Navy, through his WWII service as a rear admiral and Fiscal Director of the Navy Department, and his subsequent service in the Department of Defense, Mr. McNeil rose through the administrations of both political parties to become the recognized authority on military money problems. His views were listened to respectfully in the halls of Congress, and it was he who was always called upon to explain the intricacies of the military budget.

His withdrawal from the military scene to which he has contributed so much becomes effective 1 November when he becomes President of the Grace Steamship Line.

In a farewell conference with Pentagon newsmen, Mr. McNeil forecast that the Defense Budget will remain at about the current $41-billion level through 1962-63. He believes, however, that there will be a gradual shift in spending, that more money will be devoted to modernization of weapons and less to personnel. He foresees a gradual reduction in the manpower total of the Services. He doesn't think this will be anything "drastic," adding that he does not consider a 100,000 drop in manpower as drastic but that it would enable the diversion of about $500 million annually to new weapons.

Mr. McNeil does not get too disturbed by so-called "interservice bickering." He says it is "healthy" for Service leaders to present their cases vigorously within the Department itself but he does not believe they should take their problems to the public press.

The retiring Assistant Secretary offers one suggestion to help the Secretary of Defense in his dealings with interservice problems and divisions of opinion in the Joint Chiefs of Staff. He would create administratively (legislation would not be necessary) an advisory group composed of ranking retired officers of the four Services, outstanding scientists, and engineers. This group would review any controversy and make recommendations to the Secretary.

Men of long experience in governmental administration are rare and valuable. We regret the loss of Mr. McNeil, but, knowing his devotion, we know that his advice will continue to be available if Congress or the Department should want to call upon him in the future.

IN THE JOURNAL

10 Years Ago—The strength of the Armed Forces continues to fall, with the Army now approximately 22,000 men below the President's budget proposal for 677,000 officers and enlisted personnel during fiscal year 1950. Total strength of the Armed Forces on 31 Aug. was 1,607,400, a decrease of 9,900 since 31 July.

50 Years Ago — Some wisecracks attempts in the Evening Wisconsin of Milwaukee, to show that the phrase "O.K." originated in the ignorant spelling of "All correct" as "Oil korrekt" by Zachary Taylor, while in Mexico, or some other officer of the Army. General Taylor was not a man of "liberal education" in the ordinary sense, but neither he nor any other officer of the Army that we have ever heard of was so ignorant as this.

95 Years Ago—The contrast between the public confidence today in a happy issue of the war and the general despondency of six short weeks ago, is very notable. There was a palpable cause, indeed, if not a valid excuse, for the discouragement of that former time.

Trans-Atlantic Air Evac Begins At Bedside, Two Continent Cooperation Is Cited

RHINE-MAIN AIR BASE, GERMANY

PERSONALIZED care, coupled with precision timing on two continents, characterizes MATS trans-Atlantic medical air evacuation operations which originate here.

Supervised by Lt. Col. Ralph E. Thompson, Commander of the Air Evacuation Group at Rhine-Main, preparations for the 4,000-mile medical flight to the States begin at the bedside of each patient on the day before the flight.

At that time, one of the two flight nurses who will staff the medical flight of two to three scheduled as flying ambulances each week.

Wheels are up at 1:30 p.m. and the 42 patient-passengers, two flight nurses and three medical technicians are airborne for the Azores.

At this point, numerous medical activities in the Azores and the U.S. have already taken up their part of the precision schedule.

Before the plane's wheels are off the ground, messages are sent by Colonel Thompson to the Armed Forces Medical Regulating Agency in Washington and to Ft. Dix and McGuire AFB, N. J., personnel telling them what patients would be arriving on the flight and describing the illness of each.

Washington assigns each patient to the Armed Forces hospital nearest his or her home or, in specialized cases, to the best qualified to treat a particular illness.

Shortly after 7 p.m., Azores time, Eastern Time, the medical flight makes its approach to Lajes AB, where the patients are transferred to the 1605th Air Force Hospital for a hot meal and bath, during the three-hour refueling lay-over. This hospital is commanded by Col. James L. Borders.

Shortly after ten o'clock the plane is airborne again, on its last leg to McGuire.

Six a.m., Eastern Daylight Time, Eastern Time, the medical flight lands at McGuire AFB, where ambulances wait to carry the patients to the Ft. Dix Army Hospital, commanded by Col. Knox Dunlap.

Total elapsed time for the trip is 18 hours.

The flights carry an average of 40 members of Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps families to Stateside hospitals each month.

A JOURNAL STAFF REPORT

visits each patient and is briefed by attending physicians on each case history and special medical treatments which may be required in flight.

Chief Nurse of the Rhine-Main Air Evac. Group is Maj. Edna L. Phariss.

These visits take place while the patients are at the Army's 97th General Hospital in Frankfurt, commanded by Col. Roosevelt Cafarelli, or the Air Force Hospital in Wiesbaden, under Col. Thos. C. Buch.

Just after 1 p.m. on the day of flight the stateside-bound patients arrive by medical bus and ambulance to be carried aboard a Douglas C-118. In a matter of minutes, the ambulance crews and air evacuation staffs have carried or escorted all patients aboard the specially equipped Eastern Transport Air Force plane, one work will be continued at Huntsville.

AF Will Get Top Spot In Space

The new program calls for the separate assignment of development responsibilities for pay loads and specialized ground support equipment for space and satellite systems to the Services "on the basis of primary interest or special competence."

The Air Force won responsibility for Midas, the early warning satellite against ballistic missiles, and Samos, a reconnaissance satellite system.

The Navy was given responsibility for Transit, a satellite borne navigation system.

The Army was awarded responsibility for Notus, the interim satellite-borne communications system.

Dr. York said Secretary of Defense McNamara will set the date of actual transfer of specific projects from ARPA to the Services.

When the projects are transferred, which will be within a year, the money also will go to the Service selected.

The total ARPA budget for this fiscal year is $540 million. The four projects which will be shifted to the Services account for more than 50% of the ARPA appropriations.

During recent months, there has been considerable criticism voiced on Capitol Hill concerning the administration of military space projects.

The new plan, the Pentagon said, is being implemented "to prepare for the shift from development to use of space systems, and to simplify administrative procedures."

Describe Projects

An official "fact sheet" issued by the Department of Defense describes the four projects assigned to the military services as follows:

TASK SATURN (Under Contract to Army) designates a space booster consisting of a cluster of eight ballistic missile type liquid propellant rocket engines with a total thrust capability of about 1½ million pounds. The basic engine of the cluster is designated the H-1, a modification of existing THOR and JUPITER engines. The Army Ordnance Missile Command awarded the contract for the development of the H-1 to Rocketdyne on 11 September 1958 and the first engine was delivered about 1 May 1959. The first static test of SATURN is scheduled for early 1960 and the entire system is expected to enter flight test status about one year later.

SATURN will provide quick, relatively inexpensive, reliable delivery of an extremely high-thrust booster capable, with appropriate upper stages, of lifting a multi-ton load of instrumentation. SATURN thrust will be nearly four times the nation's currently most powerful flight-tested basic propulsion system, the ATLAS ICBM cluster of engines.

PROJECT MIDAS (Air Force) has been initiated to develop an early warning system against ballistic missile attacks, based on the use of satellites. The project will investigate the use of infrared sensors to detect an aggressor missile or space vehicle at the earliest possible time after it leaves the launch pad.

PROJECT TRANSIT (Navy) is a research, experimentation and systems development undertaking to obtain an astro-geodetic navigation capability based on satellite or other space vehicle applications and capable of satisfying the operational requirements of the military services.

Because vast areas of the world are inadequately plotted, a more accurate, all-weather, space-based navigational system is essential for world-wide military movements and operations of many types, including combat aircraft, ships and submarines. The important difference in the use of satellites instead of stars for navigation is that a satellite can be fitted with a radio source which can be detected by any ship, aircraft or other object on the surface at any time of day or night and in good or bad weather.

In principle, a moving receiving station, such as a ship or aircraft, will listen to a radio frequency signal transmitted by the navigational satellite as it comes over the horizon. This signal is initially shifted up the Doppler effect due to the satellite's rate of approach to the receiving station. The nature of the Doppler shift, together with precise knowledge of the navigation satellite orbit, will allow the moving receiving station to locate its position to 2/10ths of a mile.

It is hoped to have initial systems in operation within the next few years.

PROJECT NOTUS (Army) is a research, experimentation and systems development program to obtain a family of satellite-borne communications repeaters which will provide a global system capable of meeting military requirements for communications of high reliability, security and large capacity under conditions of natural and man-made interference. Existing communication capacity is likely to be saturated within a decade, and the communications satellite offers the most promising answer to this problem. The three phases of the Communications Satellite Program are to provide (1) intercontinental point-to-point communication through a satellite delayed repeater technique, (2) ground-to-air and ship-to-shore two-way communications through a satellite instantaneous repeater, and (3) broadcast-type communications to ground and mobile units. First phase of this work—called TASK COURIER—is to provide vitally needed expansion of international trunking capacity with a high degree of reliability and speed of service by means of a delayed-relay communications satellite. Three contracts were awarded by the Army Signal Corps for ARPA in July, 1959. Philco Corporation, Philadelphia, was awarded a $3,614,415 contract for the Communications package. International Telephone and Telegraph Company, Nutley, New Jersey, was awarded a $4,046,119 contract for the ground-based communications stations. Radiation Inc., Melbourne, Florida, received a $1,283,740 contract for the ground-based antennas. COURIER is designed as a delayed-relay package aboard a 500-lb. satellite to transmit and receive as many as twenty 100-word-per-minute teletypewriter messages between two or more ground stations. As the satellite passes over or near a ground station, messages will be transmitted to the satellite relay where they will be stored on magnetic tape. Later, when the satellite arrives over or near the ground station to which the traffic is addressed, the ground station will trigger the relay with a command signal. While the ground station is receiving messages it may also be transmitting traffic on a different frequency for relay to other ground based stations. COURIER is basically similar to, but of greater capacity and longer expected life than the first communications relay, PROJECT SCORE, which was carried aloft by an ATLAS missile successfully tested during December, 1958, by the Army Signal Corps. The Project demonstrated the utility of putting into orbit communications equipment capable of receiving, storing and re-transmitting messages.

AF INTEGRATION

The Air Force has started the wheels rolling to integrate up to 30,000 officers with over two and less than six years' service into the Regular establishment.

To plan its integration action, personnel officials have begun a survey of major commands to determine how many officers in this category have made applications for Regular commissions through this month.

DoD Cancels USAF's F-108 Interceptor

to eagerly by Air Force leaders who saw in its development a great stride forward in aircraft performance. The Air Defense Command felt that it was an absolute "must" for the protection of the nation. ADC plans had called for about 500 F-108s organized in 20 squadrons.

About $150-million already has been spent upon the project and it is estimated that $50-million more will be needed to clean up the contract. However, Department of Defense officials estimate that termination of the contract will save some $2.4 billion in future expenditures.

The full text of the Defense Department's announcement follows:

"As of today, the Air Force contract with North American Aviation, Inc., of Los Angeles, Calif., for the development of the F-108 long range interceptor is being terminated.

"For possible application to other weapons systems the development by Hughes Aircraft Co., of Culver City, Calif., of the F-108's advanced fire-control system and the GAR-9 missile will continue to go forward at a reduced level.

"The decision to discontinue the F-108 development was reached after completion of a study which discloses that the already great and rapidly rising costs and the personnel and materiel requirements of advanced weapons systems dictates revision of certain existing projects. The F-108 program termination is consistent with this effort and the priorities now established for long-range weapons systems, combat readiness, and improved early warning.

"The F-108 was to be a long-range fighter capable of three times the speed of sound (Mach 3). Its development was to precede but to be closely integrated with that of the Mach 3 B-70 bomber, also being developed by North American. The two weapons systems have a number of major components in common, and accordingly a portion of the $150-million expended to date on the F-108 has been of direct application and of great value to the B-70 program."

Air Force Will Tell Its People How To Avoid Difficulties Overseas

The Air Force soon will begin publication of a series of instructions telling its personnel how to keep out of trouble in foreign lands.

The Air Force may also give special advice on how to stay out of trouble in the U. S.

The special instructions comprise part of the Air Force's preventive law program.

Purpose of the program is to inform personnel on housing conditions and regulations, automobile purchases, installment buying and all other areas which can affect the mismanagement of an airman's or officer's financial life. It also includes some pointers on how to stay out of jail.

First publication of the preventive law series is called "You In France," and will be issued shortly.

It will be followed by "You In England," "You In Germany," "You In Japan," and "You In The Philippines."

THE FORTHCOMING BUDGET SQUEEZE on military spending is a potent factor in the Pentagon decision (see page 1) to shift space projects and funds from ARPA to the Services. This action means that in the future the individual Services will be required to fund projects now handled from ARPA's $540 million budget.

IT IS CONCEIVABLE that a service in a particular instance might not press for maximum funds for a particular space project if its means—as certainly it must—that other activities of that Service will need to be curtailed under a restricted budget. One possible example is NOTUS, the interim satellite-borne communication system assigned to the Army. One purpose of NOTUS is to provide ground-to-air and ship-to-shore two-way communications through a satellite instantaneous repeater. Seemingly, the Air Force and Navy might make more use of NOTUS under certain conditions than the Army.

ARMY PEOPLE WERE DISHEARTENED by the extemporaneous remarks of Dr. Herbert F. York, Director of Research and Engineering, at the Pentagon news conference at which he told of the space project transfers. Referring to the ARPA's SATURN project, under development at the Army Ballistic Missile Agency, Dr. York commented that the "Defense Department, ARPA, the Air Force, etc.," are in agreement that the work should be continued at Huntsville. Presumably, the Army was included in the "etc." category, but this was not certain.

RESEARCH AND ENGINEERING CHIEF YORK revealed that the apogee of the Army's new Pershing missile being built by the Martin Company is about 150 miles. This would indicate that the missile will have a range of 700 miles and beyond.

SINCE THE ARMY HAS SUFFERED new blows at its space aspirations you can be sure that Secretary Brucker and Chief of Staff Lemnitzer will fight hard for maximum utilization of Pershing. The Air Force's Tactical Air Command is pressing for a new "middle-range, surface-to-surface" ballistic missile. Army people say the Pershing can accomplish the missions for which TAC desires a new missile. Crux of the problem for the Army is to win Defense Department and JCS support for an "artillery" mission of a range of 500-1,000 miles.

THE AMERICAN DENTAL ASSOCIATION, which for the last year and a half has vacillated in its attitude toward a dental care plan for military families, has now completely straddled the fence (see page 1). The A. D. A. refuses to help the Services in initiating a DentiCare plan this year, but at the same time supports such a plan in principle and demands a voice in any proposal which may be seriously considered.

A MAJOR FACTOR IN THE ASSOCIATION'S DECISION was the slim budget anticipated for the coming fiscal year. Dental officials feel that this budget will rule out any Administrative support for DentiCare and they don't want to be put in the position of supporting a losing cause. Another factor is the "unrealistic" $30 million estimated price tag placed on the program by MediCare officials. Top Pentagon officials and the Dental Association feel that the initial cost will be at least $50 to $60 million and may even rise as high as $100 million. The cost of MediCare this fiscal year will be about $78 million, according to latest estimates.

THE AIRBORNE ASSOCIATION, taking its cue from Secretary Brucker's appeal for a "One Army" concept, has proposed that a unified Army, embracing Active, National Guard, and Reserve elements, be known as "The Grand Army of the Republic of the United States of America." The abbreviation would be GARUSA. The Association declares: "It is a term that will make the United States Army unique, since there is none other in the world that can call itself a grand army. It is a term," the Association adds "that neither the Navy nor the Air Force can conscientiously adopt pending action on our proposal." An editorial in the Association's publication for October asserts that "the Army now has the greatest opportunity in its entire existence to assume leadership as the dominant service in national defense. To forego this opportunity would be an unforgivable action."

THERE IS NO QUESTION, whatever the Airborne Association's views on Army "dominance," that the Army is handicapped in getting its story across because the "One Army" concept is still some distance from being a reality. It's going to take skillful handling in developing the "One Army" project, for there is a danger that half-hearted leadership in this area could lead to an increase, and not a decrease, in component and branch squabbles.

ARMY HUMAN FACTORS ENGINEERS, meeting this week at Redstone Arsenal, Ala., heard a report on how Army scientists kept the Jupiter IRBM "from becoming too tricky for the men who operate it. . ." The result was that when the finished Jupiter rolled off the assembly line, the Army related, "it already was closely matched to the capabilities and limitations of the crews assigned to use it." Mention was not made in the Army announcement that the crews will be either USAF personnel or members of Allied forces.

THE AIR FORCE CAN BE EXPECTED to follow up with additional reports on its plans for development of airborne nuclear power following remarks last week by General Thomas D. White, CofS, to the Defense Orientation Conference Association in Washington, D. C. He said that although most recognition has been given to the requirements for the nuclear manned aircraft, "there is evidence that nuclear rockets and nuclear ramjet missiles also appear to offer greatly increased performance over their chemical counterparts." General White said nuclear rockets would possess tremendously increased thrust, making possible launching of high payload military satellites and surface-to-surface missiles. He reported that "nuclear ramjet proposals offer the promise of low altitude, high speed, long range missiles which would augment our strategic ballistic missile force."

SUCCESS OF THE NATO ASW CENTER at LaSpezia, Italy, which Admiral Jerauld Wright, SACLAN, is visiting late this month, is expected to lead to establishment of a similar NATO center for Land Warfare. The AntiSubmarine Warfare Research Center was activated last May under supervision of Admiral Wright's NATO Headquarters in Norfolk. The proposed Land Warfare Center would be under General Lauris Norstad's NATO Headquarters in Paris.

THE ARMY'S RESEARCH CHIEF, Lt. Gen. Arthur G. Trudeau, is missing no opportunity to emphasize Army-Marine Corps cooperation in R&D projects. At the demonstration of the Army's new GOER vehicle at Ft. Knox, Ky., last week (First Page), General Trudeau took particular note of the presence of Marine Corps observers and emphasized the close working relationship between the two Services in the new weapon projects.

PENDING BUDGET ECONOMIES undoubtedly will see the Army and Marine Corps moving even closer together in their Congressional presentations next year. Both face similar difficulties, particularly in the manpower areas.

CANCELLATION OF THE F-108 Mach 3 interceptor (story on page One) decided upon this week by the Defense Department, will be highly resented in the Air Force. As Lt. Gen. Joseph H. Atkinson, ADC Commander, told newsmen at the recent AFA convention, we can not gamble that the Russians are not working on a Mach 3 bomber. If they should come up with one and we have no interceptor that can cope with it we will be in a bad fix.

AIR FORCE LEADERS feel that the manned aircraft will be a requirement for many years to come. No missile can decide to withhold its destruction; neither can a missile change its mind nor select its own target. Thus, Air Force planners feel, if manned aircraft are necessary we can not afford to rest on what we have, we must continue reaching out for improved performance. To drop the promising F-108 for budgetary reasons is the poorest kind of economy.

VADM. RICKOVER'S TESTIMONY before the House Appropriations Committee in which he reported his observation of the Russian school system is reaching best-seller proportions. The Committee reports that it has had 5,000 requests for the transcript and that, because requests are still coming in, it has ordered another 10,000 printed.

WHEN CAPT. HENRY L. MILLER, skipper of the aircraft carrier, USS Hancock, becomes a rear admiral, he will have the distinction of being the first Navy flag officer from the State of Alaska. He was born 18 July 1912 at Fairbanks and graduated from the Naval Academy Class of '34. The Captain was tapped for admiral by the FY '60 selection board.

SERVICE OFFICIALS ARE PLEASED over the forthcoming series of Air Force pamphlets on how to keep out of financial trouble and/or jail in foreign lands (see page 8). A suggestion has been made that the series be extended to include a pamphlet on how to keep out of trouble and/or jail in Washington, D. C. Air Force Judge Advocate officials are considering the subject.

FAMILY STRENGTH IN THE SERVICES is growing, despite cuts in military manpower. The number of Armed Forces family members is approaching the 3,150,000 mark. That's half a million more than in January 1956.

MARINE FIRST SERGEANT ROBERT A. GILBERT has been graduated No. 1 in a six-week Sergeants Major Class at the Parris Island, S. C., Recruit Depot. That was nothing new; Sergeant Gilbert has been top man in 11 Marine Corps and civilian courses he has attended.

MAJ. GEN. DON R. OSTRANDER, USAF, will become Deputy Director of ARPA on 1 October. He will relieve RADm. John E. Clark.

RADM. VICTOR D. LONG, Naval War College CofS at Newport, R. I., will retire 1 October in the rank of vice admiral. Capt. Harry G. Moore will serve as Acting CofS until a relief for Admiral Long is named. There will be numerous situations in the next few months in which the Navy will issue "Acting" orders because of accelerated retirements to beat the 1 November "tombstone" deadline. In many instances, rear admiral billets will be filled by captains, and four-stripe posts by commanders.

Medical Notes In The Forces

AFIP Seeks Historical Items For Museum

The Armed Forces Institute of Pathology is seeking military medical material to expand the many famous collections of historical items in its Medical Museum.

The Institute will celebrate its hundredth anniversary during and concurrently with the Civil War Centennial. Through the long history of the Institute a great number of historical instruments have been assembled, but among this material is very little of Confederate Army origin. Such items particularly are being sought.

The Museum has one of the finest collections of microscopes in the world. These instruments are displayed so as to show the evolution of the microscope from its origin through the most recent developments in electron microscopy. Few microscopes have been added to this collection in recent years, and efforts are now being made to fill the gaps, particularly the years from 1920 to the present.

It is requested that persons having items they might wish to contribute write The Director, Armed Forces Institute of Pathology, Washington 25, D. C., relative to their acceptability and shipping instructions.

AUTHORITY AND RESPONSIBILITY!

Military people know what's meant by Authority and Responsibility, and so do the Editors and staff of the ARMY NAVY AIR FORCE JOURNAL. We are proud of the fact that when the wire services and newspapers quote from THE JOURNAL, as they do so often, they refer to us as the "unofficial but authoritative" Service publication.

Authoritative information is what Service people need in order to make professional and personal decisions. It is the aim of THE JOURNAL to provide such information.

The Journal is today, as was the case with its first issue in 1863, completely independent. We put out only one publication, and that publication has one paramount objective: strengthening National Defense.

AUTHORITY AND RESPONSIBILITY: These are the watchwords of THE JOURNAL staff, as we serve the members of the Armed Services and their families with vital "need to know" information.

Senate Group Urges DoD To Draft Tighter Law On Reserve Promotions To Star Rank

THE Senate Preparedness Subcommittee has issued a strong criticism of Armed Forces policies and practices governing promotion of officers to General and Flag rank in the Reserve Forces.

The subcommittee called upon the Department of Defense to draft corrective legislation on the subject.

In a report to its parent Committee on Armed Services, the Subcommittee presents several case histories, including that of actor James Stewart, of persons who were recently considered for star rank by the Senate.

Among its case histories, the report points out that some officers with inadequate Reserve participation records had recently been recommended for promotion to star rank. In two cases, the nominees were over age for promotion, and in two others they had previously resigned their Regular commissions to accept better paying jobs with industry, the Subcommittee said.

All case histories in the report were anonymous, although the facts and names were familiar to those who followed recent confirmation hearings before the Senate Armed Services Committee.

Hardest hit in the report was the Air Force. Of the 10 cases cited, eight concerned Air Force Reserve Officers.

Summing up the facts of its report, the Subcommittee concluded that:

- "Promotion to flag and general rank should not be conferred exclusively as a reward for past military service but should include consideration of the individual's future potential.

- "There was some evidence that these promotions have been conferred without reference to the Nation's needs, to any known military requirement, or to the capability of the individual.

- "There appeared to be no systematic order or logic in the selection of officers for promotion to these ranks.

- "There was an inconstancy of application of the criteria used in the selection of officers.

- "Mobilization assignments and their interrelated training categories are in danger of being destroyed through the malassignment of individuals whose training categories are not in consonance with their assigned positions.

- "There appeared to be a disturbing trend to use the Reserve component as an instrumentality of some benefit for Regular officers who resign their commissions to accept better paying jobs with industry."

Army O.K.'s Tan Short Sleeve Shirt; Tells "Do-It-Yourself" Method

The Army has authorized wear of the short sleeve Army tan shirt with the standard length tan trousers.

In Circular 670-40, the Army also authorizes cutting down the long sleeve tan shirt to short sleeve size and provides do-it-yourself instructions for the operation as follows:

"The individual should determine the proper cutoff point for each shirt sleeve separately.

"Wearing the shirt, the individual should hold his arm close to the side of his body and bend the elbow so that his lower arm is across the front of the body, parallel to the floor. In this position, the shirt sleeve should be marked evenly all around and parallel to the floor at a point one-half inch above the sharp bend inside the arm, opposite the elbow. This mark represents the place at which the hemmed bottom of the shirt sleeve should fall. Cut the sleeve off evenly 1 1/4 inches below the mark.

"Turn under one-quarter inch of the raw edge of the sleeve and stitch one-eighth inch from the turned edge, forming a hem. Then turn under 1 inch and stitch one-eighth inch from the turned edge, forming a 1-inch finished hem. It may be necessary to slit the inside of the hem in order to compensate for any differences in the circumference of the sleeve.

"This procedure will allow the edge of the finished sleeve to fall sufficiently above the elbow so that the sleeve will not be wrinkled in the bend of the elbow."

Air Reserve Center Gets RCA Computer

Increased speed and accuracy in all types of data processing will result from use of the RCA 501 electronic computer system to be installed at the Air Reserve Records Center in Denver next month, according to officials there.

The computer system, completely transistorized, will use reels of magnetic tapes to store complete information on members of the Air Reserve. The information stored will be "read" by the computer system and used in preparation of reports, making mobilization assignments, and many other jobs.

The new equipment can process instantly information on each of the more than half million Air Reservists whose records are maintained at the Center, updating files daily, providing rosters for selection boards, and answering within 24 hours the two thousand questions submitted daily to the data processing division.

Together with a high speed printer, the computer will prepare mailing labels and other printed material at 600 lines per minute.

While doing other functions simultaneously, the computer system can complete in 17 minutes a job requiring 367 manhours of effort under the old manual system.

The RCA 501 is said to be about 50 times faster than the great computers used to track present-day satellites.

In addition to its great speed, the computer's extreme accuracy will be especially important in the preparation of reports used by Headquarters USAF, the Department of Defense, and Congress in planning for national security.

7th Marine Squad "Best In Corps"

The 1st Squad, Third Platoon, "C" Company, 1st Battalion, Seventh Regiment, 1st Marine Division, Camp Pendleton, Calif., is the best rifle squad in the Marine Corps.

The 13-man squad, led by A/Sgt. Troy O. Oliver, out-fired and out-performed all rivals to earn the "best" laurel from judges scoring the All-Marine Corps Unit Combat Competition at Marine Corps Schools, Quantico, Va.

In full battle gear, the nine competing squads—the best from each of the Corps' nine Regiments—were required to take an objective under simulated combat conditions. After a tactical landing from an assault helicopter, the squad leaders were given their objectives by an umpire who set boundary limitations for the problem. During the assault on the objective, the squads, advancing under simulated artillery and machine gun fire, engaged remote controlled pop-up targets that represented enemy soldiers.

Orders from the Squad Leader, the contestant's individual actions and hits on the targets were the basis for scoring.

Each member of the winning squad was awarded a gold medal, with winners of second and third place receiving silver and bronze medals that are worn in the same manner as marksmanship badges.

The winning squad is made up of: A/Sgt. T. R. Oliver, Squad Leader; A/Cpls. A. Paro and J. Carr; L/Cpl. R. R. Barenquist; PFC's M. C. Patterson, D. K. Noah, T. Sajulan, T. L. Fay, D. H. Constant, D. J. O'Flaherty, J. N. White, D. A. Chapman and A. L. Goodloe.

Aeronca Will Build
Bomarc Assemblies

Aeronca Manufacturing Corporation's George M. Ebert, Vice President and General Manager of the Longren-California Division of Torrance, Calif., has announced receipt of a firm contract from Boeing Airplane Company's Aerospace Division of Seattle for the production of an unnamed number of master chassis assemblies for the Bomarc IM99A Missile.

The value of the contract is said to be about $500,000.

This award marks the entry of Aeronca's Longren-California Division into the missile field and will bring its current backlog of production orders to approximately $5 million.

The Division is producing major structures and assemblies for such aircraft as Boeing's B-52G, KC-135 and 707. Other major production includes structures and assemblies for Chance-Vought's F8U2 and F8U2N, for Convair's 880 jet airliner, just coming into service, and for the McDonnell F101 Voodoo.

Air Force Orders G-E
Long Range Antennas

A $2,166,420 contract for long range search radar antennas has been awarded the General Electric Ordnance Department, Pittsfield, Mass., according to General Manager Gerald A. Hoyt.

U. S. COAST GUARD

Secretary of the Treasury—Robert B. Anderson
Commandant—Vice Adm. Alfred C. Richmond

A NEW requisitioning, supply issue and billing system, designed to speed delivery of supplies by reducing paper work, soon may be adopted by the Coast Guard.

A test of the system, similar to that now in use by the Navy, gets underway 1 October, in the Second, Eighth and Ninth Coast Guard Districts, in St. Louis, New Orleans and Cleveland, respectively.

Navy activities participating in the test are the Naval Supply Depot, Great Lakes, Ill., and the Naval Station, New Orleans.

Heart of the system is a set of electronic machine cards known as NavSanda Form 1093 which serves as a composite requisition, issue record, and accounting medium for Navy supply transactions. Accounting and recording functions are performed by the punch cards independent of the material movement.

Coded accounting data developed by the Coast Guard and punched on the forms will eliminate the need for formal invoicing by the Navy and result in quicker payments to the Navy for Coast Guard supplies.

The Navy furnishes the Coast Guard with about 80% of its supplies.

Capt. Brunner Decorated

Capt. Loren E. Brunner, Chief, Electronic Engineering Division, USCG Headquarters, has been awarded the Legion of Merit for initiating and developing electronic equipment resulting in improvement of the LORAN (Long Range Aid to Navigation) system.

The Captain was particularly cited for development of LORAN "C" which greatly advanced the state of the art. The LORAN "C" project involved installation of new stations in the East Coast. In addition, Captain Brunner was cited for devising the Rho Theta computer which converts LORAN information to director finder capabilities.

Captain Brunner is married to the former Betty Drury of New London, Conn. They have two sons, Loren E., Jr., and Paul J. Their address is Box 300 W., Route #5, Cedar Lane, Vienna, Va.

All have effective dates of rank from 16 September with the exception of Harry S. Higgins and Raymond Teichrow, named to the Machinist category, whose warrants are effective from 1 October.

Philco Develops
Target Simulator

A new radar target simulator has been developed by Philco Corporation's Government & Industrial division to meet specifications of the Federal Electric Corporation, Paramus, N. J.

Unit cost is about $10,000.

The first five simulators have been delivered to Federal, which operates the DEW Line for the Air Force.

Because the simulator does not interfere with normal operation of radar equipment, both real and synthetic radar returns may be displayed simultaneously.

When operated in conjunction with an early warning radar system, the simulator generates azimuth, range and video information for separate targets which will maneuver realistically under the precise control of the operator.

Names of the remaining appointees and their categories are:

To Gunner—Eddie Brophy.
To Radio Electrician—Robert H. Neuman, Clifford A. Gustavson, Richard A. Eberhardt, Charles E. Hug, Robert W. Spencer, Harold C. Harris and Constantine J. Kosloski.
To Supply Clerk—Gordon L. Anderson.
To Carpenter—John E. Tucker.

FAMILY RESEMBLANCE

The reason for the similarity between the Navy's Polaris and Air Force Thor missile guidance systems has been explained to the House Committee on Science and Astronautics by RADM. W. F. Raborn, Chief of the Polaris project.

He told the committee: "The philosophy under which the Polaris missile guidance system is designed is quite similar to that of the Thor."

"As a matter of fact, the reason for this undoubtedly is because it had the same daddy, which is Dr. Draper, Charles S. Draper, Head of the Instrumentation Laboratory of MIT."

INDUSTRY IN DEFENSE

Navy Orders 26 Lockheed Neptunes

The Navy has awarded a fixed-price contract of $19.1 million to Lockheed Aircraft Corporation for 26 P2V-7 Neptune patrol airplanes.

The contract is a follow-on to the fiscal 1959 P2V-7 procurement program to maintain necessary fleet levels of patrol aircraft. It will extend production of the versatile, long-range patrol plane into 1961.

Seven successive models of the basic Neptune design have been standard Anti-Submarine Warfare aircraft since the first model was built in 1944. Models of the P2V are flying in operational squadrons of the navies of Canada, France, Netherlands, Australia, Japan, Brazil and Argentina, in addition to the U. S. Navy.

The P2V-7 is powered by two Wright turbo-compound engines with added power from two J-34 engines for short field take-offs or attack purposes.

Aluminum Wheels For Chrysler M-60

The Army has placed orders for forged aluminum wheels for the new Chrysler M-60 battle tank.

The wheels are being forged at Bridgeport Brass Company's Adrian, Mich., plant. Bridgeport developed a special forging technique to produce ribs in wheels as an integral part of the forging.

Each road wheel weighs approximately 80 pounds and the idler wheel about 13 pounds, effecting a substantial reduction in weight. After forging, the wheels are shipped to the Chrysler Tank Ordnance Plant in Center Line, Michigan. They are then machined and a rubber tread is applied to the wheel periphery.

Ryan Firebees Score In White Sands Test

Newly disclosed successful ground launchings of Ryan Firebees at the White Sands Missile Range, N. M., have given these target missiles a new operational potential—surveillance and reconnaissance with ground troops.

The White Sands tests in which Firebees are shot into the air from the ground provide the jet targets with greater flexibility as realistic "enemy" targets for ground-to-air and air-to-air missiles, by freeing them from aircraft launching in regions lacking air strips and during periods of bad weather.

Ground launching will enable the Army to conduct its own air defense maneuvers and evaluation of its ground-to-air missiles without dependence on aircraft support from other services. The Firebee target system also is given greater mobility, permitting its use in almost all types of terrain and remote training areas.

In addition to its basic function as a weapon systems target, the Firebee offers new tactical potential to the Army—as a reconnaissance and surveillance vehicle which could transmit vital information about enemy positions by photographic or electronic means.

To meet the Army's needs, an 81-foot rail launcher, designed by Ryan, was built at White Sands under auspices of the Army Rocket and Guided Missile Agency, Redstone Arsenal, Ala.

From this launcher, the Army's own XM21 Firebees are being rocketed into the air with the assistance of JATO (jet assist take-off) boosters. These provide an additional "kick" until the airborne Firebees wing along under their own jet engine power as they climb to the target range.

In the second phase of this program, Firebees will be launched from a "standing start" with a zero-length launching system now being designed by Ryan engineers.

Republic F-105 Checkout

First Bell HU-1A Copters Reach Field

The first Army HU-1A "Iroquois" helicopters delivered to field units are now with the 101st Airborne Division at Ft. Campbell, Ky.

Two speedy, jet-powered ships were flown away from Bell's Hurst plant between Ft. Worth and Dallas.

The HU-1A, this country's first production-line jet-powered helicopter, can out-climb some WWII fighter planes and has been flown 160 miles per hour in level flight.

Crews on the two deliveries were CWO Frank Donahoo, pilot, and Sgt. 1/C Leo Rea, line chief, on one ship, and CWO Bob Day, pilot, and SP/5 Richard Moore, a crew chief, on the other.

Republic Reports Advance In Rocket Motor Cases

Republic Aviation Corporation reports development of stronger and lighter motor cases for such solid fuel rockets as the Minuteman, Polaris, Sergeant and Little John.

The cases, which are both 30% stronger and 30% lighter than those now in use, have withstood stresses up to 250,000 pounds per square inch.

Developed by the company's Missile Systems Division, the cases consist of a series of laminated inner and outer rings of steel, tempered, to increase strength and accuracy.

Conventional processes call for a one-piece welded construction requiring special heat treating and welding equipment and processes.

Aerojet Helps Army Get The Jump

THE Army has awarded a $56,000 contract to the Aerojet-General Corporation of Azusa, Calif., for a feasibility study of the possible use of small rocket-life devices as a jet-assist to combat troops in overcoming terrain obstacles.

A Pentagon announcement said that "the concept will be explored by a means of augmenting the physical ability of the soldier by enabling him to move quickly over short distances by a series of long slides or jumps, jet assisted, while still protected by the terrain."

The system analysis will deal with rocket thrust, weight, location, number of nozzles, flight control, human response, reaction time, and safety aspects. The present contract will also include an investigation of various propellants and logistical support.

Hoffman Receives ARDC Solar Contract; Sylvania Wins Polaris Missile Award

An Air Force $600,000 contract for the development of a large area solar-electric power system for use in space satellites has been awarded to Hoffman Laboratories Division, Hoffman Electronics Corporation, it is announced today by James D. McLean, Division President. The power system, which is to be capable of producing 100 watts of electricity continuously and 500 watts peak, will utilize silicon solar cells manufactured by Hoffman's Semiconductor Division, Evanston, Ill. These cells, which convert sunlight into electricity, were utilized in the Navy's Vanguard I satellite which is still transmitting its signal after a year and one-half in orbit, and in the NASA Explorer VI.

Sylvania Electric Products, Inc., of Woburn, Mass., has received a Navy contract from the Bureau of Ordnance for special switching transistors to be used in the Polaris Weapons System, according to Ernest H. Ulm, General Sales Manager of the company's Semiconductor Division. Sylvania is a subsidiary of General Telephone & Electronics Corporation.

The newly developed transistors are the result of advanced manufacturing processes and assure improved reliability and controlled distribution of current gains, Mr. Ulm declared.

M. I. T. SCHOLARSHIP HONORS DR. RIDENOUR

CREATION of a Dr. Louis N. Ridenour Memorial Fellowship in honor of one of the principal architects of the Space Age, is announced by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and the Lockheed Leadership Fund.

Dr. Ridenour, first Chief Scientist of the Air Force, was Vice President of Lockheed Aircraft Corporation and General Manager of its Electronics and Avionics Division at the time of his death last May.

M.I.T. has awarded the $3,200 fellowship for 1959-60 to Joseph Pedlosky, an M.I.T. graduate who held a Lockheed Leadership Fund scholarship and, like Dr. Ridenour, was born in New Jersey.

Dr. Ridenour during WWII became Assistant Director of the Office of Scientific Research and Development's Radiation Laboratory at M.I.T., which helped transform early radar into a valuable military tool that contributed significantly to the Allied victory. After the war, he edited 28 technical volumes on radar and microwave electronics for the radiation laboratory and wrote several books and many technical papers.

Radioplane Division Gets F-106 Contract; Hamilton Standard Will Build Control Units

The Radioplane Division of Northrop Corporation, Van Nuys, Calif., has been selected by Convair, a Division of General Dynamics Corporation, to furnish parachute escape and survival kit packs for the F-106A supersonic all-weather interceptor. Each pack will consist of one drogue parachute, one main parachute and one pilot survival kit. Initially, Radioplane received authority to proceed with the production of 134 packs.

Temperature control system for the Grumman A2F and North American T-39 will be developed and produced by the Hamilton Standard Electronics Department, it is announced by Charles M. Kearns, General Manager. The A2F is a Navy attack bomber powered by two Pratt & Whitney J-52 engines.

The T-39, North American's entry into the growing small utility jet transport field, carries four to eight passengers and a crew of two as a transport but may also be used as a high speed navigational trainer. Power is supplied by two Pratt & Whitney JT-12 engines.

Telemeter Magnetics, Inc. of Los Angeles has received an Office of Naval Research contract for a large scale high speed electronic computer memory to be supplied to the Naval Research Laboratory for use with the Naval Research Electronic Computer. The contract, amounting to nearly $200,000, provides for delivery of a core memory having a capacity in excess of 850,000 bits.

Former AF Test Pilot Gets Northrop Appointment

Northrop International, a division of Northrop Corporation, has announced the appointment of John A. Stiehl as Manager of Administration.

Announcement of Mr. Stiehl's new position was made by J. Gilbert Nettle-

Beech Awards Contract To Summers For KDB-1

Summers Gyroscope Company of Santa Monica, Calif., has received follow-on orders totalling in excess of $525,000 from Beech Aircraft Corporation, of Wichita, Kans., for flight control systems and parts for the Beech-built Navy KDB-1 target aircraft.

The new orders bring to a total of $2 million the Summers orders relating to this project.

The Navy KDB-1 target is used for surface-to-air and air-to-air weapons systems evaluation and training.

made as to the issuance of bids for a military prototype.

The two GOER vehicles now under test were built by the LeTourneau-Westinghouse Corporation, using off-the-shelf commercial earthmoving equipment.

Newsman attending the demonstration at Knox saw the GOER carriers negotiate courses on rugged terrain, mud, and water that could not be traversed by other Army cargo carriers.

Among those present was Col. Jasper Wilson, now a member of the Staff and Faculty at the Command and General Staff College, Ft. Leavenworth, Kans. About five years ago, Colonel Wilson conceived the GOER concept and was in the forefront of efforts to gain support for the project.

A JOURNAL STAFF REPORT

It is noteworthy that the Army was able only last year to issue a development contract to LeTourneau-Westinghouse for four experimental vehicles.

Praising the speed that has marked the project since last year, General Trudeau made a point in his informal remarks at the conclusion of the demonstration to note that "so far, we have succeeded in keeping 15 different echelons from cranking in something or other to slow up the schedule."

It remains to be seen whether General Trudeau, who has been leading the drive to streamline Army R&D projects to save time, will be able to push the GOER project as rapidly in the next year as has been the case during the past 12 months.

Meet The GOER

Ft. KNOX, KY.

MAXIMUM payload and maximum mobility, with minimum utilization of manpower, are key characteristics of the 15-ton and 5,000-gallon GOER vehicles with six-foot tires being tested by the Armor Board here.

Officially tabbed the "Truck, Cargo, Logistical, High Mobility, 15-ton, 4x4, XM 437," and the "Truck, Tank, Fuel, Logistical, High Mobility, 5,000-gallon, 4x4, XM 438," the GOER vehicles have a 46% and 45% payload to gross weight ratio, respectively.

Military specifications will require that they be capable of operating 40,000 miles without major repairs.

If the Army elects to proceed at high speed with the GOER program—and such a decision must be made next year—it seems certain that procurement of the experimental 10-ton 8x8 XM409E2 will be drastically curtailed or eliminated.

It is not likely that limited procurement funds would permit Army purchases of both types of vehicles.

Army officials say that the heavy load-carrying capabilities of the GOER vehicles and their ability to traverse all manner of terrain, including an ability to "swim" at speeds of about 3 miles per hour, would permit substantial savings in manpower by replacement of the numerous cargo carriers needed today to do the job of one GOER.

During tests at Ft. Knox, the GOER truck and tanker have been able to clear obstacle courses which have stalled other vehicles.

Capt. Elmer L. Birk, the Armor Board Project Officer, describing a water demonstration, noted that the 15-ton GOER could carry the load of 9 M-59's.

The four GOERs which have been procured to date from LeTourneau-Westinghouse for the Army tests cost an average of $57,000 each.

The Army has plans for future tests with a 16-ton GOER vehicle.

The Army is seeking a minimum 30-inch ground clearance for its GOER vehicles. The versions now under test have a 30-inch clearance between the axles, but only 16 inches at the axles.

This would indicate the possibility of using even larger tires.

Here is the basic GOER technical data for the XM437 truck:

Navy Dedicates New Flight Test Facility

The Navy's newest flight test facility was dedicated in ceremonies at Bedford, Mass., recently.

Located at Hanscom AFB, the nearly $2 million structure to speed development of advanced missiles and airborne electronic devices, will be operated by Raytheon Company.

The first military facility to employ a suspended roof design, the hangar-laboratory is "well on its way to becoming a standard type in future Navy hangar construction," RAdm. Robert E. Dixon, Chief of the Navy's Bureau of Aeronautics said in dedication ceremonies.

Work to be carried on in the new facility includes the joining of Sparrow III, the Navy missile for which Raytheon is prime-contractor, with the new McDonnell F4H1.

Terming Sparrow III a "superior overall missile system," Admiral Dixon said the air-to-air missile is drawing praise from all-weather squadrons for surmounting intercept problems posed by weather. "They now honestly feel they have in hand a realistic and effective air defense system," he said.

Other dedication speakers included Charles F. Adams, president of Raytheon; T. C. Wisenbaker, manager of the firm's Missile Systems Division; George T. Bottjer, flight test facility manager; Capt. T. C. Herlihy of the First Naval District and Capt. T. J. White of the Bureau of Yards and Docks.

A-Plane Shift Asked

The joint Congressional Atomic Energy Committee has recommended that responsibility for producing the Nation's first atomic powered airplane be shifted from the Department of Defense to the Atomic Energy Commission.

In a report to Congress, the Committee said that the Air Force still does not have a target date or military assignment for the plane, despite the fact that it has been working on it for 13 years and has spent almost $1 billion.

DentiCare Future Up To Congress

questioning could elicit strong support for DentiCare from Dr. Berry and Service medical and dental leaders, who have long gone on record in favor of such a plan.

Before such hearings, they note, the Services and Defense Department officials will be obliged to offer at least token opposition to the dental plan out of loyalty to the official Defense Department position.

Dental Association Seeks "Share Cost" Proviso In Any DentiCare Plan

A "share-the-cost" plan at both military and civilian facilities has been proposed by the American Dental Association as one of its requirements for an acceptable dental care plan for Service families.

At its 100th anniversary meeting in New York, the Association departed from previous medical care precedents among the Services to suggest the Government charge military family members for dental care provided at Armed Forces installations.

The Association said that any dental plan should cover all types of care, except routine orthodontics, and should include all acute medical and surgical care involving oral tissues which is performed in a hospital.

It also stressed that Congress should be informed that a family dental care program "can make only minimal use of Uniformed Services' dental facilities without affecting seriously the primary obligation of these facilities to provide dental care for members of the uniformed establishments."

Navy's New Ejection Seat Goes On Display

The Navy's new rocket-propelled ejection seat, developed by the Columbus Division of North American Aviation, Inc., will be on permanent display at the Navy Bureau of Aeronautics, in Washington, D. C.

The display seat is complete, incorporating all design features of seats now in use in T2J Buckeye jet trainers being flown in the Naval Air Basic Training Command at Pensacola, Florida.

Provided for pilot inspection or indoctrination are an adjustable headrest, inertia reels for shoulder harness, a personnel and a drogue chute, and a survival kit. The seat can be adjusted electrically for pilot height. Strapped-in pilots can simulate ejections by either of two methods of release, pulling a "B" ring above the helmet down over the face or by pulling up on a "D" ring located between the pilot's legs.

The rocket-propelled ground and flight level escape system has been successfully demonstrated from moving aircraft at Port Columbus, and at Andrews Air Force Base near Washington, D. C.

Tech Courses Still Open As Oct. 1 Deadline Nears

With the application deadline of 1 October approaching, the Air Force's Institute of Technology reports a number of vacancies still existing in courses given under its Professional Education Program.

The most critical area, and the one Air Force officials would like to see filled up, is in engineering. About 38 vacancies exist for courses in chemical, aeronautical, civil, electrical, mechanical and petroleum engineering.

Other course vacancies listed by the Air University cover physics, transportation management, and operational space vehicles (training with industry). The courses last from 12 to 36 months.

Air University officials are urging qualified officers to send in their applications promptly. Although the cut-off date is 1 October, consideration will be given to applications arriving after the deadline insofar as any vacancies may exist.
